Where package holidays originally dominated the market for visitors to Lanzarote, within the last several years the area has become a lot more favored by independent holidaymakers. It has been with the steady rise in budget airlines offering the Canarian island as one of the scheduled destinations.

The other factor that has drastically transformed the vacation market has been the recent growth in the number of private Lanzarote Villas that can be booked on-line should a visitor choose to, they no longer need to set foot in any of the islands resorts.

And those travellers who do construct their very own holiday are often delighted by the unspoilt nature from the island's rural interior. The unique scenery of Lanzarote owe much to its volcanic past and so are fiercely shielded from urban expansion with justification.

There has been a variety of tourist attractions created around the island. And these attractions are generally the inspiration of architectural genius César Manrique, whose influence continues to shape how the area looks.

And whilst there has been some urban growth since Manrique's death, the majority of it's been contained in just a few particular areas, including the southern resort of Playa Blanca. Town has grown from little more than a whitewashed fishing village in to the second largest tourist destination on the island.

Because of this, there's a broad selection of Playa Blanca villas to select from, and with most villas being newly constructed in the past ten years, they have a tendency towards a fresh and clean modern design and style with light and airy interiors., and on account of their recent construction, the majority are extremely modern, airy and comfy and well suited to general holiday usage. Along with several excellent family hotels..

Equally popular of course is the original resort of Puerto del Carmen, which has not seen as much construction during recent times. Its holiday infrastructure typically includes aparthotels and studio complexes rather than villas.

Puerto del Carmen holiday villas are usually based in the more exclusive residential aspects of town and so are more unlikely to generally be architecturally identical to neighbouring properties. Nevertheless, they offer very suitable holiday accommodation for holidaymakers, especially those who enjoy usage of an exclusive pool.

For those who crave something more exclusive, there are also properties made out of caves and water storage tanks elsewhere on the island.
