Savour A Getaway In The Canary Islands

Considering a holiday trip in the Canary islands this fall? This delightful group of islands are the leading vacation location for international vacationers after Catalonia, and provide brilliant weather year-round owing to their ideal location.

The largest and most commonly known island is Tenerife, home to the tallest mountain in Spain, Teide, that rises majestically to 3718 metres above the island creating an extraordinary contrast in temperature between the snowy mountain top and the hot sandy beaches delightfully dotted along the islands coast at sea level. Like many islands in the Canary islands, the southern reaches are home to the main tourist resorts, while the northern area tends to be cloudier and a lot cooler.

On the flip side Lanzarote is a tiny island, roughly speaking size wise measuring 40km by 60km-- and hasn't been exposed to excessive development.

So anyone wanting to really get away from it all in the Canarian archipelago should head here, as the island is home to plenty of great striking scenery, in particular in the north. Similar to Tenerife all of the principal holiday resorts are found in the islands southern most reaches and this is typically where you can find the widest choice of holiday accommodation: with thousands of condos and villas in Lanzarote for hire.

Of the two largest vacation resorts Puerto del Carmen is without a doubt the most popular, as it features a plethora of fantastic beaches in addition to the quaint old town harbour. There are also a copious amount of hotels and Puerto del Carmen holiday villas for anyone in search of accommodation.

Playa Blanca is slightly smaller sized and more peaceful and can be described as amiable, laid-back holiday resort which is definitely not seen as being night life central as many of the much more dynamic locations of Lanzarote, instead the emphasis here tends to be sustaining the elegance and original stature of this old fishing port. But there is still a extensive option of apartments and villas in the area with year round availability

The formula of wonderfully laid out resorts, world class beaches and breathtaking natural panoramas make Lanzarote a exceptional and memorable vacation destination, so ensure that it's on your shortlist.
